Expectations of Modernity-James Ferguson 1999-10-01 Once loaded as the ware of the African future, Zambia's economic boom in the 1960s and early 1970s was fueled by the export of copper and other primary minerals. Since the 1980s, however, Zambia's copper industry has increasingly been a source of conflict for workers and their communities. Expectations of Modernity explores the social and cultural responses to this prolonged period of sharp economic decline. Focusing on the experiences of minersworkers in the Copperbelt region, James Ferguson traces the failure of post-independence modernization efforts in Zambia, which has since endured a period of economic instability and political upheaval. Ferguson’s book builds on earlier contributions to the fields of anthropology, political economy and postcolonial studies, and it is a must-read for anyone interested in understanding the history and politics of contemporary Zambia. Red Tape-Akhil Gupta 2012-07-17 This project presents a major new theory of the state developed by the renowned anthropologist Akhil Gupta. Seeking to understand the complex and widespread poverty in India, the world’s fourth largest economy, Gupta examines the Indian nation-state and the poverty reduction strategies that have shaped it. His project is comprised of two volumes: one on the political economy of poverty and the other on the culture and politics of national belonging. Gupta argues that the state is not merely a tool for economic development, but that it is a key player in shaping the lives of ordinary people. Through his analysis of the state’s role in shaping the lives of ordinary people, Gupta’s work provides a new understanding of the political economy of poverty in India. Anthropologists are increasingly pressurised to formulate new field methods for teaching. Unlike many hypothesis-driven ethnographic texts, this book is designed with the anthropology student and field researcher in mind, with particular emphasis on the core anthropological method: long term participant observation. Anthropological Practice explores the practical applications of fieldwork and the way in which anthropologists think about their work. It is written by Jane Colley, a leading cultural anthropologist and has been praised for its clear and accessible approach. The book covers a wide range of topics, from the challenges of fieldwork to the complexities of cultural relativism. It is an essential guide for students and professionals in the field. Applications of Anthropology Sarah Pink 2005-12-01 The beginning of the twenty-first century the demand for anthropological approaches, understandings and methodologies outside academic departments is shifting and changing; it is a new era of ethnography. The next stage of developments is not simply about applying the methods and results of diverse organizations in the private and public sphere this volume examines existing and historical debates about applications of anthropological work. “Anthropology as an ‘empire’” - academic anthropology, the question of anthropological identities in new working environments, new methodologies appropriate to these contexts, the skills needed by anthropologists working in applied contexts where multiple partners work together to provide a holistic picture of the kind of ethnographic experience that can be achieved in the ‘outside’. The volume signifies an encouraging future both for the application of anthropology outside academic departments and for the new generation of anthropologists who might be involved in these developments.

Transgression as a Rule Ulrich Beck 2007 Whereas conventional, German-Polish relations are marked by irritations, the previous phase of politics and discourse from 1990 leading to the EU-accession of Poland was marked by an unprecedented shift in the relationship. This was a consequence of a long-standing practice cooperation as well as a change in academic border studies. Transgression as a Rule argues that resulting from this shift in attitude and the changing practice cooperation, there is a need for a more expansive approach to ethnographic action: supported by the state but partly uncontrollable with it, drawing on the powerful discourse of cooperation and trying to escape from it. Their practices can also inform the practices of border studies.
